Stylish Sisters

or most Easters, my six sisters and I would go up to our attic to see who fit into which hand-me-down dress. Then we'd spend an afternoon trying on hats, gloves and shoes for church.

Things changed in 1968. My oldest sister, Nola -- who had plans to attend the School of Fashion Design in Boston -- sewed matching East dresses for Mom and all of us girls. She picked bright orange fabric and white lace for detailing down the front. We were all excited to wear our new finery.

Big families were much more common back then, but not many had seven girls and no boys, and that made ours newsworthy. The local paper ran a photograph of us in our matching dresses, and Dad in his suit, capturing a wonderful family memory.
